It's no secret that Joe Rogan has managed to remain relevant exactly because he isn't mainstream. He's had guests on from all different spheres of thought and backgrounds, from Ben Shapiro to Jim Dore, from Edward Snowden to Kevin Hart. However, some nincompoops don't see it that way. They want him banned for daring to utter the biological truth that men and women exist absolutely. As a person in the mixed martial arts world, he understands the value of strength differences between men and women. He has many times on his podcast expressed the simple truth that regardless of how you fill about tranies, there is no getting around the fact that those born male vastly outperform those born female, in sports. For that, he has gotten the ire of the professional woke liberal class that operates the tech rooms at Spotify. Employees at threatening to strike if Rogan was not removed from Spotify, this after he struck a deal with the company for $100 million. I think Shant Mesrobian said it best:

> Notice how the woke professional class appropriates the language and facade of labor and working-class politics, even though it has absolutely nothing to do with securing a better livelihood for themselves or anyone else.

This is what the left has become: wine-cellar, pearl clutching, twitter virtue-signaling, corporate boardroom working, gated-community dwelling, capitalist upper-class, non-diverse, mostly White, BLM/antifa marching, hammer and sickle waving soccer “moms” and domesticated homosexuals with selectively progressive, socially acceptable, woke views without a care for economic issues, since they have no such insecurities. And it makes me sick. Though thankfully for Joe, Spotify has done nothing about this fake outrage. Hopefully it stays that way.

PS: Rogan has decided to withdraw his name from possible moderator of a future presidential debate, because you know, who’d wannabe part of shitshow part 2.
